Dr. Neil Jacobs, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Environmental Observation and Prediction

Americans-- and by the way, the entire world--is appropriately horrified that NOAA is no longer standing by Sept. 1 assurances that "Alabama will NOT see any impacts from Dorian."

As if keenly aware of confusion, potential DANGER inherent in the President's incorrect advisement, our National Weather Service even repeated the true facts.

Regardless of excuses, NOAA owes the public an apology.

It is NOAA 's job to report the facts, not cave in to obvious attempts to cover up nonsense. Agencies across the spectrum are dealing with that very problem with our current Administration.

NOAA has always been an agency we could trust. Let's keep it that way. While our national weather and ocean advisory institutions will live on, the current Administration in this country is temporary.

Sincerely,
Sherrie Lieber Pasarell
